OUR MISTAKES

Late last year we published a big map – When Justice Began at Home in Washington, DC, Circa 1900 – and put a small slice of it on the inside of the front cover of our autumn issue. Shortly thereafter we received this note from attentive reader John Hennigan:

I just received my copy of the Autumn 2017 issue of the Green Bag. I noticed on the inside front cover describing the location of the house of Supreme Court Justice George Shiras, Jr., that the text refers to a “leftward-pointing arrow.” My eyes are not as good as they once were, but, try as I may, I cannot see any arrow in the accompanying picture. I suspect this may have resulted from your use of the photograph and associated text that was part of one of your previous publications, but that no arrow was included in the present version. I will now proceed to the rest of the issue.

A pretty good diagnosis, wouldn't you say? We've printed that picture again on the inside of the front cover of this issue, but this time we've added an arrow. This time around we've also put a tidbit about Shiras on the inside of the back cover. In another erroneousness, Shale Stiller has notified us that the key case cited in his thoughtful letter about fasteners (For Want of a Staple, 21 Green Bag 2d 13 (2017)), Castruccio v. Estate of Peter Castruccio, is reported at 169 A.3d 431, not 169 A.2d 431. And so we pass the word along to you, with our apologies for failing to catch and correct the error. We won't waste ink promising that it won't happen again.
