

NOTES AND CREDITS

- Tessa L. Dysart (In Search of Sound Judgment, p. 195): She would like to thank the research librarians at the College of Law for their help with this article.
- Robin C. Feldman (Artificial Intelligence: The Importance of Trust and Distrust, p. 201): I wish to thank Nick Thieme for invaluable assistance and insight. I also wish to thank the participants in the US Army Cyber Institute's September 2017 Threatcasting Workshop on Weaponization of Data in Washington DC, particularly Nick Percoco, Liam Fury, and Ryan Lee. This article is an expanded exploration of a threatcasting hypothetical I suggested at the workshop. I am indebted to Michael Callahan, Ron Dolin, Herbert Lin, Laurel Riek, and Abe Sofaer for their thoughts about the field. Finally, I wish to thank Giora Ashkenazi and John Gray for research assistance.
- Aaron S. Kirschenfeld (Green Bag Cataloging Trivia, p. 215): Many thanks to Jesse Griffin for tolerating, and then thoroughly answering, my questions.
- Stephen R. McAllister (The Supreme Court and Superman: The Justices and the Famous People in Their Family Trees, p. 219): Anything said in this article is me speaking personally, not in any professional capacity. I owe a debt of gratitude to my outstanding research assistant at the University of Kansas, Jeff Carmody, who made this article and the chart possible through his wonderful efforts. Any errors are mine. Jeff was fantastic.
