

EX ANTE

NO MISTAKES?

We've had no new reports of our technical failings since our previous issue. Readers are being either too kind or too inattentive. Either way, we are not pleased.

This unfortunate development does, however, give us room to salute a once-upon-a-time (at least) practice of that great perennial annual, Wisden Cricketers' Almanack. In the advertising section at the front of the 1929 Wisden's (it was more possessive back then), between pages 16 and 17, we found this little item tipped in:

Maybe we should try their method, if we return to our usual error-prone form in future issues.
